

Want to build your own high-performance Camaro? The Camaro body-in-white kit is your blank canvas. To get started, here are a few things you should know:

- Check out the detailed body-in-white kit information in the following pages
- Fill out the online customer agreement form to be eligible to purchase a kit
- Take the completed form to your authorized GMPP dealer
- When your order is processed, the kit components are carefully packed and then shipped to your GM dealer for pickup
- To complete your project, come back to gmperformanceparts.com for crate engines like the new CT525 for Circle Track racing; LS7, ZZ572R and ZZ383 for drag racing; the LSX376 and LSX454 crate engines (perfect for the LSX Shoot-out!!); and the LS3 for road racing – the same engine that powers the Camaro that will compete in the Grand-Am KONI Challenge GS Class

RACERS REJOICE! GM PERFORMANCE PARTS TO OFFER NEW CAMARO BODIES IN WHITE GRAND BLANC, Mich. – Racers who want to slip into something more fashionable at the track next year will find the 2010 Camaro is just their size. GM Performance Parts will offer body in white packages of the new Camaro starting in the first quarter of 2009.

The basic package includes an assembled body structure (front fenders, hood, roof, doors, rear quarters and trunk lid), and also comes with the complete floorpans and chassis rails. Consumers must fill out an online application to be eligible to purchase one. The form will be available in February at www.gmperformanceparts.com. Bodies will be sold on a first-come, first-serve basis. There is no limit to the number a racing enthusiast can purchase.

“This is the easiest and most cost-effective way to build a race-ready new Camaro,” said Dr. Jamie Meyer, product marketing manager, GM Performance Parts. “We envision racers using these bodies for all types of competition, from Pro Street and Competition drag racing to road racing.”

The body in white includes a painted or e-coated body shell (colors will vary) and no additional components or materials. The bodies do not have vehicle identification numbers, so they may be used only as racing vehicles that will never be licensed for street driving. Racers will add the powertrain, fuel system, suspension, interior components, glass (or sanctioning body-approved alternative) and safety equipment, then go racing.

“For the racers who would strip down the entire car and replace most of the components with racing-spec parts, the body in white saves time and money,” said Dr. Meyer. “Drag racers, for example, won’t have to worry about swapping out for a solid axle – they can just bolt one up and go.”

The body in white’s unadorned interior also saves time and money by allowing racing teams to eliminate the process of stripping a fully equipped production car in order to reduce weight and prep the chassis for a roll cage.

And when it comes to building up the body in white, GM Performance Parts offers crate engines, engine controllers, high-performance transmissions and hundreds of other parts to help complete the project – including dedicated drag racing engines and engines suited for circle track and road racing competition.

GM Performance Parts – tested to the limits, backed by GM
GM Performance Parts crate engines undergo a 50-hour, full-throttle engine dynamometer validation that requires the engines perform from peak horsepower to peak torque. GMPP also installs crate engines in its own engineering vehicles for testing and continuous improvement.

Enthusiasts who crave the latest technology, maximum horsepower and the expertise and confidence backed by GM, can purchase GMPP crate engines, blocks, heads, high-performance transmissions and components from GMPP Authorized Center dealers or any other GM dealership nationwide.
